

'Happy animals and great-tasting meat'

At Nature's Script Farm in Great Village, animals are allowed to be animals, not just products in a meat-making factory.

That means pigs are housed outdoors and root in the earth, pasture-raised chickens are moved every day and cows and sheep graze on grass instead of being forced to eat grain.

"We have happy animals that give us great-tasting meat," says Marguerite Phillips.

Even shipping stress is avoided because there's a provincially inspected abattoir right on the farm. "No growth hormones, antibiotics or medicated feed are used," says husband Frank Phillips. The names of their products reflect how the animals are raised: Hillside Pork, Grass-Fed Beef, Grass-Fed Lamb and Pastured Poultry.

The couple began the farm to ensure a high quality of meat for their family of five children. "And people who buy Nature's Script meat like knowing this," says Frank.

"That's why young families with kids come here. Because they know that's what we're doing for our children, so they're trusting us to grow food for their children."
